

Ittoqqortoormiit, East Greenland, Greenland

A scattering of brightly painted houses clinging to a rocky headland at the mouth of Scoresby Sund — the world's largest fjord system. Around 350 people live here, sustained by hunting and the memory of centuries of Inuit ingenuity. For a cruiser, this is as remote as it gets.

KNOW BEFORE YOU GO

- Don't miss the last Zodiac. There are no hotels in Ittoqqortoormiit. Know your ship's return time and be back early — conditions can change fast.
- Bring Danish Krone cash. The Pilersuisoq store and Nanu Travel accept cards, but local craft sellers deal in cash only. ATMs do not exist here.
- Do not touch the sled dogs. They are working animals, not pets, and can be aggressive. Stay on paths and away from dog yards.
- Dress for Arctic conditions year-round. Even July can bring temperatures near 0°C with biting wind. Waterproof layers, gloves, and sturdy boots are essential for Zodiac landings.
- Ask before photographing people. Residents are accustomed to cruise visitors but appreciate respect. A nod and smile go a long way. Never photograph through house windows.
- No Wi-Fi, expensive roaming. Switch to airplane mode on landing to avoid surprise data charges. The village has no public internet access.
